

The 2016 Corcoran Chair Conference

Marginality and Identity in the Ancient Mediterranean World

April 3-4, 2016

Boston College Chestnut Hill Campus

This conference examines the idea of “hybrid identities” and its component terms—hybridity and identity—by considering a selection of individuals and groups whose activities, allegiances, and/or ideas straddle the boundaries constructed by ancient Jewish, Christian and pagan leaders.

Among the questions to be considered:

What were people doing when they engaged in the practices that we, and/or perhaps some of their contemporaries, would have considered as belong to the “other”?

Does the concept of boundaries—whether closed, open, porous, or shifting—remain useful in our attempts to understand something about the ancient Mediterranean world? Do boundaries exist, or are they figments of the scholarly imagination?

CONFERENCE PROGRAM

SUNDAY, APRIL 3

MURRAY FUNCTION ROOM, YAWKEY CENTER

1:00-2:00 p.m.

Adele Reinhartz (University of Ottawa and Boston College)
Hybrid Identities in the Ancient Mediterranean World

Jonathan Klawans (Boston University), Respondent

2:00-2:30 p.m. Coffee break

2:30-4:00 p.m.

Yonder Gillihan (Boston College)
King Areios of Sparta Recalls the Discovery of Written Evidence for Spartan-Judean Kinship (1 Makkabees 12:19-23)

Tessa Rajak (Oxford University)
How to Praise a Jewish Mother of Martyrs in a Greek City: The Panegyric in 4 Maccabees 15-16

4:00-4:30 p.m. Coffee break

4:30-6:00 p.m.

Karin Schlapbach

MONDAY, APRIL 4

HEIGHTS ROOM, CORCORAN COMMONS

9:00-10:30 a.m. a